General Crook, a native of Ohio, graduated from North Carolina. Many farms are entirethe Military Academy at West Point in 1852, and was assigned to duty in the Fourth infantry, then serving in California and Oregon. He soon became noted for courage, coolness and skill in Indian warfare, and his name has since become a household word in every State and Territory west of the Mississippi river. During the war of the rebellion he became one of the prominent commanders of the National forces, reaching the command of a separate army corps, and at the close of the war was in command of Sheridan's cavalry in Virginia. With the surrender of General Lee, he was promptly ordered back to his old field of duty in Northern California and Eastern Idaho, to quell the Pintes and Bannocks, then in those States, as well as Nevada and Washington Territory. He pursued them during the worst winter ever known in that region, and at last brought them to bay in the Infernal Caverns in the lava beds of Idaho, killing a great number and reducing the reainder to submission.

This success induced President Grant to order him to Arizona Territory to quell the Apaches, who had been at hostilities since the first coming of the Spaniards. General Crook endeavored to secure peace by gentle means, but these failing, he began his operations with startling energy, attacking the hostiles in their chosen strongholds. At the head of the Santa Maria, at the canyon of Salt River, at Turret Butte, at Superstition Mountain, and dozens of other places, the Apaches were surprised by forced night marches, thoroughly whipped and forced to surrender to the number of five thousand. They were not permitted to live in peaceful idleness, but were compeled to farm for their living. Only one band was exempted by name from Crooks' control-the Chiric huas-who afterwards gave the authorities so much trouble. Promoted to the position of Brigadier-General, Crook was transferred to the Department of the Platte, where the Sioux, Cheyennes, Bannocks and Utes were elements of danger to the public peace. In his campaigns against the led his troops for two winters in the face blizzards in Dakota, Wyoming and Montana, at a temperature of forty degrees below zero, and through a summer Accounting to the London Standard the of unusual heat and unprecedented rains. odo His will. THE WORKING-WOMEN.

They Are More Contented Than the Idle Daughters of the Rich. Surely no able-bodied, self-respecting woman has any complaint to make of the fact that in the pasi fifty years there has been secured to her the right to earn her living. This is rather an occasion for rejoicing. In this age, when the public press fields of labor for women, when from pul pit and rostrum and work-shop and schoolroom are coming words of help and encouragement, it is curious to hear one voice raised in lamentation over the fact that all this means the setting of women to work, as if they had not always been working-slaving, in fact- a unrecognized corners and against fearful odds, as though the socalled curse of labor had not, for women as well as men, concealed the "fairest boon God's love could sen an though there were any reason in fact for such a statefew bitter or discontented ones. Nothing A man cometh forth as a flower and is cut so broadens one's life and mind and character as hearty, wholesome work. It is the greatest of follies to spend so much time in commisserating the hard lot of the working-girl in having to work. Many an idie, novel-reading, discontented daughter of wealth is more to be pitied. Pity the conditions under which women have to work, the inadequate wages, the unreasonable demands, the cruel oppression and the many disadvantages which the agitation of strong-minded women have not yet been sufficient to remove, but offer your sym-

Whenever they give dinners at clubs or at home they display their hospitality by elaborate menus taste or digestion. This is not the epicurean banquet is that where five courses are not exceeded. Look at the menus of some often considered bores, because one can not leave the table with satisfaction. It is no little art to give a real enjoyable dinner. The people here are too busy to become good dinner-givers, for it requires an idler to be successful at this. Our wealthy men do not entertain at home, and at the clubs they are often lavish without pproaching epicureanism. More attention is now paid than formerly to menu cards and service. A menu-cord should be original, simple and elegant so many of them are gandy and over-ambitious that they destroy the effect desired.
